

LIBERTARIAN U.S. SENATE CANDIDATE
BUCKLEY COMMENTS ON TODAY'S ARTICLE BY JIM WOOTEN OF THE AJC

Atlanta, Georgia – August 26, 2008

Allen Buckley, the Libertarian Party's candidate for U.S. Senate, has commented on today's article in The Atlanta Journal-Constitution (AJC) by Jim Wooten.

Regarding the article, Buckley said: “While Jim Wooten said some positive things in today's column, his statement that I have no chance of winning is incorrect, and it is harmful to my campaign, our country and future generations. Also, he incorrectly said that I said that analysis by the Peterson Foundation finds that in two decades the 18.3 percent of GDP that the federal government consumes won't cover interest on debt, Social Security and Medicaid. To correct: I said that the GAO said to me via email that it determined that in about two decades, assuming tax revenues remain at 18.3 percent of GDP-the level we're used to experiencing-the revenue will be insufficient to cover net interest expense, Medicare, Medicaid and Social Security.”

Regarding Wooten's comments on federal judges, Buckley said: “Saxby Chambliss is almost as liberal as Jim Martin. Furthermore, the judges issue, while important, is grossly minor relative to the financial problems, with the growing debt, according to the GAO, ultimately ‘spiraling out of control.’”
